

How Is The IFC-LPI TPMA Certification Different?

The IFC-LPI TPMA certification is a vital addition to your trainer toolbox, giving you more flexibility and confidence to tailor your services to your trainees' unique needs in emerging markets. It is delivered in Africa, the Middle East and South Asia, through a network of local and regional high-skilled training professionals who are trained and certified by both IFC and the LPI.

How Will I Get Certified?

There are several ways in which you can be assessed for the IFC-LPI TPMA certification based on your needs and preferences.

The diagram below outlines the key steps in the certification process.

To learn more and apply for the IFC-LPI TPMA certification contact an IFC-LPI certified assessor. A full list of certified assessors is available at www.ifc.org/smeadvisoryservices and www.thelpi.org/certification/tpma-ifc

About IFC

IFC, a member of the World Bank Group, is the largest global development institution focused on the private sector in developing countries. It is committed to financing private sector businesses in emerging markets, mobilizing capital in international financial markets, helping clients improve social and environmental sustainability, and providing advisory services both to businesses and governments.

About LPI

Founded in 1995 in the UK, the Learning and Performance Institute (LPI) is an independent, not-for-profit global authority on learning and development. It offers several certifications, including the Trainer Performance Monitoring and Assessment (TPMA) certification.

For more information on the LPI, please contact:

Kelly Hamblett
Director of Global Accounts, LPI
Email: khamblett@thelpi.org

